Dealing with common knowledge

- Facts and information in common use, which can be verified from a number of places and are likely to be known by a large number of people, are regarded as common knowledge.
- As a thumb rule, information that occurs in five or more sources can be considered as common knowledge.
- Common knowledge or facts are not subject to copyright, but the words used to express them may come under copyright restrictions, especially if the wording is original or unique.
- To avoid this problem, use the existing facts or common knowledge by writing in your own words.
