

Introduction

Teaching is impartation of knowledge. Libraries have a major role in providing knowledge to public. In this sense, librarians should be good teachers. Libraries are especially important now when the whole idea of education is stressing more and more on independent learning and acting.

This study suggests that the university libraries should consider the public as its secondary clientele and it should also extend its services and resources to residents of the community in which it is located.

